Meets Nixon in Washington

Mrs. Meir seeks new ties with U.S.

Soviet Union resumes aircraft shipments, Phantom deliveries likely to resume, sources predict

UNITED NATIONS (JCNS) -

Mrs. Golda Meir, Israel's prime minister, who has finally received the invitation she has been seeking for months, to meet President Nixon, is coming here to re-establish the sagging American-Israeli relationship and to ask for a resumption of Phantom deliveries. All the indications point to her success in both aims.

The reasons why she has now a better chance, Western diplomats extremely close to the situation say, is that American efforts to achieve an interim Suez agreement are dead, and that - although Washington won't admit it openly - the Soviet Union has resumed shipments of aircraft to Egypt after a hiatus of several months.

President Sadat's increasingly bellicose statements, on the other hand - though Western sources don't believe they will lead to an all out war - are expected to result in a new "war of attrition" with Egypt making increasing use of terrorists.

With outside pressures off America to placate Egypt by denying Israel more Phantoms, and interior pressures, especially from Congressmen and Senators, as well as Jewish leaders, mounting, President Nixon may be found to be in a more receptive mood for the reopening of the Jet pipeline to Jerusalem.

The JCNS correspondent here has learned that the United States, after cutting off Phantom deliveries in July to pressure Israel into an interim Suez agreement, suggested to the Soviet Union that both powers quietly institute an embargo on arms to the Middle East.

Washington hoped for at least a tacit Soviet agreement and when Moscow's aircraft shipments declined, it was thought that America had done it. But new aircraft shipments to Egypt last week have ended American hopes for a joint embargo.

Egypt's "war of attrition" may begin soon as a means of pressure on the United Nations General Assembly during the Middle East debate.

Mahmoud Riad, the Egyptian foreign minister, is expected to arrive here almost simultaneously with the start of the "mini war." He will head the Arab drive for a resolution which would call on all states to refuse military or economic aid to Israel until she replies "positively" to Jarring's proposals of last February, in which the UN envoy to the Middle East suggested an Israeli withdrawal to the old international frontiers as part of any peace settlement.

Arabs could very well get this resolution passed in vew of the pro-Arab majority in the assembly, but it would have no teeth since only the Security Council has the power to vote sanctions.

Morris B. Kaufman

Fund to honor 2 Metro leaders for their service

A veteran community leader, Morris B. Kaufman, and a new figure in community affairs, Michael G. Shulman, will be honored by the United Jewish Welfare Fund of Toronto at its 33rd annual meeting on Thursday evening, Dec. 16, at Beth Tzedec Synagogue.

UJWF President Donald Carr has announced that Mr. Kaufman will receive the Ben Sadowski Award of Merit, presented annually since 1960 to a member of the Jewish community for outstanding services. Mr. Shulman will receive the Leadership Development Award, given annually to an outstanding young leader for service and commitment to the community.

A lifelong commitment to Judaism is the mark of Morris Kaufman who has devoted his efforts to the community and to Israel for almost 40 years. He was campaign chairman of the United Jewish Appeal in 1966 and the Negev Dinner honoree in 1964. He is currently an honorary vice-president of the United Jewish Welfare Fund.

Michael G. Shulman

Mr. Shulman, a chartered accountant, devotes considerable time and effort to local affairs, serving on the boards of the United Jewish Welfare Fund, the Jewish Vocational Service, the Young Jewish Community Council and is on the United Appeal's agency allocations committee. He was on the board of the Social Planning Committee of Metropolitan Toronto.

He is a founding member of the Young Congregants of Holy Blossom Temple.

Israel issue could replace Vietnam: ADL

GROSSINGERS, N.Y. –

The Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith has warned that opposition to Israel and to American support for the Jewish state may replace Vietnam as a key issue of the far left and segments of the extreme right.

According to Judge David A. Rose, chairman of the League's national executive committee, "a sustained anti-Israel propaganda campaign" by extremists in the United States since the 1967 Six Day War escalated sharply in 1970 and again this year.

Speaking to the 58th annual meeting of the League, the Boston jurist said that right and left-wing extremists "all too often use the word 'Zionism' as a code word for attacks on Jews as Jews." He said that the American Jewish community "should continue to be aware that it is confronted with enemies on the political far left as well as the more familiar far right."

Judge Rose said that "the anti-Israel hate campaign by these extremists not only poses a serious threat to Israel's survival, but is, in its broadest sense, anti-Jewish."

Judge Rose said that as American involvement in Southeast Asia winds down, some leaders of anti-war efforts in the U.S. are attempting to turn the anti-Vietnam movement into an anti-Israel campaign. He noted an article by James Lafferty, a leader of the National Peace Action Coalition, which appeared recently in Free Palestine, the major pro-Arab Fatah publication in this country.

According to the ADL spokesman, Lafferty, a radical Detroit lawyer, spelled out plans for "exploiting the legitimate aspirations of many Americans for peace and converting existing anti-war groups to anti-Israel and pro-Palestinian purposes." The magazine is edited by Lafferty's law partner, Abdeen Jabara.

Lafferty is one of five national coordinators of NPAC and Jabara is a member of the organization's steering committee.

Judge Rose cited the following as leading the extreme left's propaganda campaign:

- The Trotskyist Socialist Workers Party; its youth arm, the Young Socialist Alliance; and various Trotskyite publications;
- The Maoist and pro-Peking Workers World Party; its youth arm, Youth Against War and Fascism, and one of the latter's front groups, the Committee to Support Middle East Liberation;
- Such publications as the Daily World on the East Coast and People's World on the West Coast;
- The Progressive Labor Party, formed a decade ago by Communist Party dissidents.

Judge Rose noted that the new left's so-called "underground press," is not, despite its name, clandestine.

He said these publications are distributed openly, reach more than a million readers,

Levesque answers queries on Jews, Israel at seminar

Last weekend, a number of prominent Canadians including State Secretary Gerard Pelletier, External Affairs Minister Mitchell Sharp and Quebec Justice Minister Jerome Choquette took part in a conference at the Holy Blossom Temple entitled Canada and Quebec – One Year Later.

But the chief interest of the audience focused on Rene Levesque, leader of Le Parti Quebecois, because of his party's insistence on separating Quebec from Canada - a political solution he claimed would be achieved by 1976.

Since this raises a number of questions regarding the security and prosperity in what would be a new country, Sol I. Littman, CJN managing editor and seminar panelist, focused his questions to Levesque on matters affecting Jews and Israel.

In order to avoid any possibility of misinterpretation the questions and answers were transcribed directly from a taped record of the session.

CJN: Mr. Levesque, my question deals with the speech you made two or three years ago in the early organizational period of the Parti Quebecois when you addressed the Canadian-Arab Federation meeting at Laval University. You identified the separatist aspirations of Quebec with the Palestinian guerillas, the Fatah. You stated that the Jews, the people who had earned the world's sympathy because of the persecution that had plagued them throughout their history, had now lost the world's sympathy by becoming an aggressive, militaristic and imperialistic power, engaged in repressing its Arab neighbors and minority. Have you maintained this view of Israel?

LEVESQUE: Well, you're giving a rather unbalanced I have to say it brutally, because it is an unbalanced report of a two or three year old speech. I went to the Arab group, and I never said that Quebec was in the same position and wanted to be in the same position as the Fatah guerillas, for one thing. In fact, I had to deplore the fact that they had to from their point of view become terrorists. Maybe you remember gentlemen now in government in Israel were terrorists from their own point of view in the Irgun and the Haganah. From their point of view, that's the way they have to see it and I wasn't there to judge their nationhood.

Appoint group to study texts for prejudice

By BEN GAILOR
CJN Queen's Park Correspondent

A committee has been appointed to recommend what action the provincial government can take to eliminate religious and racial stereotypes in school textbooks.

The committee will have four members. It will be chaired by Dr. Daniel Hill, director of the Ontario Human Rights Commission. There will be two representatives of the department of education. They are Gordon Nelson, assistant superintendant of curriculum and Peter Wiseman, group chairman in the curriculum branch. The other member is Dr. Lita-Rose Betcherman, director of the women's bureau of the department of labor. The committee's mandate is to review earlier studies, compile their recommendations and offer a course of action to the education department.

Dr. Betcherman told The CJN, she believes stereotypes are never good and some are positively harmful. "There are too often stereotypes of Jews in textbooks and in literature," she said.

She feels that this is harmful, as is the image a girl can get of the role of women from school texts. "Texts often do not show the options of life style and careers available to women. This provides a narrow outlook and makes a girl limit herself."

Dr. Hill, the commission chairman, expects the study group to begin its work this week. There will be no public hearings, but the committee will rely on the department of education textbooks studies, and the much discussed report Teaching Prejudice, which was sponsored by the Human Rights Commission and the Ontario Institute for Studies in Education.

In an interview, Dr. Garnet McDiarmid, of the Ontario Institute for Studies in Education, expressed "pleasure" at the appointment of the committee. He and co-author David Pratt of Queen's University, placed such a study group as their highest priority. Dr. McDiarmid said he thinks we will see some

A "factory" that helps people work again

By JUDY PLATT

Sheltered Workshop at Baycrest Centre

The scene: a "factory" for assembly, packaging, and light manufacturing on contract from outside firms; an "office" where records are being maintained. Not unusual for Tycos Drive in north Toronto, but there is one difference between it and the neighboring industrial plants: this is the basement of the Jewish Vocational Service, one of the family of Toronto Jewish Welfare Fund agencies.

The "foreman" and and the "office manager" are professional social workers. The "workers" are clients undergoing vocational rehabilitation; recovering from the effects of deprived homes, mental breakdowns, drug episodes. They are referred to this simulated work environment to learn the work habits that will enable them to re-enter society productively.

"Videotape therapy" is the latest innovation in the Vocational Rehabilitation Centre. Bernard Berger, JVS Associate Director, explains that "the self-image of our clients is distorted. They benefit when another dimension - the visual - supplements the counseling that is our primary mode of therapy." Operated by remote control in an adjacent room, the camera can zoom in on any area of the workshop. The videotape can be played back to the client during his daily counseling period, and a dramatic record can be kept of his progress during his 20 weeks at the centre. Mr. Berger described how this visual confrontation helps "get the mental patient out of his egocentricity - and see himself as others see him." He showed a tape of a client's initial reaction to seeing himself on tape: "That's not me. That's awful. If I did that, my boss would fire me . . ."

Another kind of workshop run by the JVS is one in which the workers' average age is 82. "The urge to work is very strong among the residents of the Jewish Home for the Aged," reports Milton Friedman, executive director of JVS, "and the demand for placement in our workshop at the Home is astounding. The residents take their work very seriously - every year I have to arbitrate some labor dispute: sick leave, profit-sharing, paid vacation! We will soon be opening a second sheltered workshop - for non-residents. Useful activity among the elderly must be encouraged; it helps forestall mental and

Agudath Israel, Hadassah leaders feud over autopsies

NEW YORK –

Rabbi Moshe Sherer, executive president of Agudath Israel of America, charged Mrs. Faye Schenk, the president of Hadassah with being "cynical and evasive" when she placed the onus on Agudath Israel and other religious parties in Israel for the Knesset law on autopsies.

In a statement to JTA Mrs. Schenk had explained her refusal to meet with the president of the American Agudist youth organization on this subject because Agudath Israel had been "derelict in not successfully getting the Knesset to change the law" which Hadassah alleges it obeys in its hospital.

"Furthermore, this law gives Hadassah the right to perform autopsies without consent, but does not compel Hadassah to violate basic human rights as practised in all democratic countries," Rabbi Sherer declared.

In his statement, Rabbi Sherer stated:

"The accusation by the president of the American Hadassah organization that Agudath Israel is 'derelict' in not influencing the Knesset to change the autopsy law is a cynical attempt to evade the real issue. To find fault with the four Knesset members of Agudath Israel, even if they were to have assistance from the handful of other religious Knesset deputies, for not influencing the 120-man Knesset to adopt its position, is ludicrous. For many years, Agudath Israel in Israel has informed President Shazar, when it was invited to join each coalition government after the national elections, that a major reason for declining this offer is its refusal to bear collective responsibility for the policy of forced autopsies. To now blame a small opposition Knesset faction, which is outnumbered almost 30 to 1, for Knesset decisions is simply a smokescreen to camouflage the facts.

"The facts are that the Knesset has not changed Israel's law to conform with the laws of all other democratic countries, which require families' consent before an autopsy is performed. This is primarily due to the doctors in Israel who have applied extreme pressure on the government. In numerous meetings with Israeli government officials, they admitted that they cannot withstand the pressure of the medical profession, which claims it needs these autopsies in order to maintain high professional standards.

"The issue at this time is not the Knesset law, because the law does not compel the Hadassah hospital to perform involuntary autopsies, but gives it the right to do so if three doctors sign a certificate. It is our contention that the American Hadassah organization, whose members benefit from the democratic practices in the USA, should request its own hospital in Jerusalem to abide by this democratic concept, and not make use of the loophole which the present Israeli law grants them."

New NPD head replaces Neo-Nazi Von Thadden

BONN (JTA) –

Martin Mussgnug, a 35 year old member of the Baden-Wuerttemberg State Parliament, was elected last night to succeed Adolf Von Thadden as president of the ultra right-wing National Democratic Party.

Von Thadden had announced his resignation from the presidency and all party committees. Mussgnug who belongs to the more "moderate" wing of the party, won election by a vote of 259-189 at the NPD party congress in Holzminden, Bavaria. A protege of Von Thadden, he is said to represent party members who want to erase the neo-Nazi image that has long been attached to the NPD.

The Nazi image was believed to have caused large scale defections from the NPD. In elections since 1968, it lost seats in all state legislatures except Baden-Wuerttemberg. In the last national elections the NPD failed to poll sufficient votes for a single seat in the Bundestag.

JNF ANNIVERSARY

The Jewish National Fund recently celebrated its 70th anniversary in the very same room in Basle, Switzerland, in which the organization was founded. Over the past seven decades, JNF has succeeded in planting 105 million trees, reclaiming 500,000 dunams of land, constructing 3,700 kilometers of border roads providing the agricultural foundation for 450 settlements and rooting 920,000 people on 4 1/2 million dunams of its land. (A dunam is one-quarter of an acre.)

As part of its anniversary celebration, the fund is initiating the reclamation of the Arava, the most isolated area of Israel stretching for 150 miles along the Jordan border from the Dead Sea to the port of Eilat. It is expected that a chain of 18 settlements will be established there and the first of these is already functioning and flourishing.

TAY-SACHS CLINIC

On Monday, Nov. 22, more than 60 representatives of 50 Jewish organizations attended a workshop set up to discuss Tay-Sachs disease, known as the "Jewish disease". Dr. [illegible], associate scientist at the [illegible] told the group that genetic disorder occurs in one in 4,000 births among Jews, mainly those who come from Eastern Europe. In Toronto, as many as one in 20 may be carriers. When both parents are carriers, there is a one in four chance that the child will be born with the disease.

The first symptoms of the illness begin to appear when the child is five or six months old. The condition will gradually worsen and the child will likely die by the time he is four.

In co-operation with B'nai B'rith Women (under the auspices of the Federation of Jewish Women), Dr. Lowden plans to head a series of blood-test clinics in an attempt to find carriers of the disease.

The first clinic on Jan. 30 will be manned by the B'nai B'rith Youth House on Hove Ave. The program is geared to persons 18-43 years of age and it is essential that both husband and wife be tested. Successive clinics will be sponsored by other Jewish organizations. For information contact the B'nai B'rith Women's office.

Jewish women's groups advise commission

MONTREAL –

Five major women's organizations here are going to unite to advise the government of up-to-date grass-roots opinions on the recommendations of the federal Royal Commission on the Status of Women.

All five organizations - B'nai B'rith Women, National Council of Jewish Women, Pioneer Women, the YM-YWHA and Neighbourhood House Services and Women's Federation of Allied Jewish Community Services - submitted briefs to the Royal Commission.

On Dec. 12th, at Samuel Bronfman House the groups will unite in a meeting to determine how the groups feel about the findings of the Commission. The federal government is subsidizing [illegible].

Task forces [illegible] of the organizations have been [illegible] intensive studies of particular aspects of the report and will submit position papers to the conference. After discussion, the five groups will attempt to come to an agreement on a series of recommendations to the government, to express a new set of views, updated from submissions made to the Commission some three years ago.

A government observer, Mrs. Freda Paltiel, will sit in on the conference which is being chaired by Mrs. William Kesler. The conference begins at 1 p.m.

Happy Chanukah! Mazel Tov!

These are two of the happiest greetings in Jewish lore. How many times have they echoed through the Jewish experience?

Mazel Tov is a wine you'll "remember". It is a wine made from heavy Concord grapes grown on the sunny slopes of the Niagara Peninsula, a wine that you will enjoy.

The wine Mazel Tov is a traditional wine, made strictly "Kosher l'Pesach", available all the year 'round to usher in Shabbat, to celebrate yom tovim, to grace the Seder table, to express fervent good wishes for the months that lie ahead, to share someone's happiness.

And what more wonderful gift can you give than "Mazel Tov"?

Youth Center in Ramla, Israel supported by Vera and Ben Walker.

Ben and Vera Walker have linked their name with Israel in a most meaningful way! Combining their interest in youth and Israel they have adopted a project in Ramla, Israel - a youth center to provide facilities for the hundreds of newly arrived immigrant youth of that town. It all came about when the Walkers discovered that the young people of Ramla have no place to meet. As Mrs. Walker said, "No one seemed to be helping and we wanted to show the people of Ramla (mostly Sephardic) that other people do care."

Ben and Vera Walker

Tenth anniversary celebrations are in the air - Next week Rabbi W. Gunther Plaut and his family are being honored by Holy Blossom Temple upon the occasion of the 10th anniversary of their arrival in Toronto. To mark the celebration, Rabbi David Polish, president of the Central Conference of American Rabbis (Reform), will be coming up from Evanston, Ill. to speak at the Friday evening service, Dec. 10. The Plaut family will be guests of honor at the congregational Anniversary Ball on Saturday, Dec. 11. And to complete the festivities, Tuesday evening, Dec. 14 has been designated an evening of the arts - there will be a concert by Maureen Forrester assisted by Mary Simmons and Cantor Sheldon Merel; and in conjunction, an art opening, a display of art works by Aba Bayefsky.

Recently arrived in Toronto is Rabbi Danile Goldberg now director of Lubavitch Youth Organization. Born in England, he pursued his Talmudic studies at Yeshivot of the Lubavitch movement in Israel and New York. The rabbi's duties include organization of youth activities with special emphasis on helping university students with their problems and attracting them back to traditional Judaism.

Cabinet praises Barlev, successor Elazar

Jerusalem (JCNS) –

Lieutenant General David ("Dado") Elazar, who becomes Israel's new Chief of Staff on January 1, 1972, has the qualities of military experience and talent to provide excellent command of the Israeli defence forces during a period which promises to be very difficult.

Stating this at a cabinet meeting, when presenting General Elazar's appointment for approval, Moshe Dayan, the defence minister, also paid tribute to the outgoing Chief of Staff, Lieutenant General Haim Barlev.

Heavy burdens had been the lot of General Barlev during the past four years, including the war of attrition launched by Egypt, Dayan said. When there was all-out war, the burdens could be shared with commanders in the field, but since June, 1967 General Barlev himself had carried a particularly heavy load of responsibility.

Mrs. Golda Meir, the premier, also praised General Barlev for the way in which he has discharged his duties as chief of staff.

Like General Barlev, General Elazar is Yugoslav-born. In fact, the two men were boyhood friends and were in the Palmach (the Hagana's shock troops) together, later fighting in the War of Independence.

Subsequently, both men commanded battalions on the Sinai front where they confused the enemy by exchanging messages in Serbo-Croat. In 1954, General Elazar joined the general staff training branch and was appointed commander of the Israel Defence Forces' infantry training school.

Two years later, he commanded a brigade which fought in the Gaza Strip during the Sinai campaign and afterwards became deputy commander of the Armored Corps.

During the Six Day War, General Elazar headed the force which captured the Golan Heights from the Syrians. In 1969 he was made head of the General Staff branch, a post which includes the direction of operational planning.

Aged 46, he is married with three children.

Premier Davis gets certificate from New Mount Sinai

The Board of Directors of New Mount Sinai Hopsital Tuesday presented William Davis, prime minister of Ontario with a certificate to commemorate the fulfilment of the hospital's obligation to raise $10 million which, together with grants from the province and other levels of government, represents the cost of the new hospital now under construction.

The ceremony was conducted in the newly-completed tunnels, connecting Toronto General, Sick Children's and Mount Sinai hospitals.

Upon completion of the new hospital, the present New Mount Sinai Hospital will become an active treatment, convalescent and rehabilitation center and will have tunnel facilities to the other hospitals as well as to the Nightingale School of Nursing, and a proposed tunnel to the Toronto Institute of Medical technology now under construction. These tunnels will enable doctors, nurses and recuperative patients to use these facilities without leaving the buildings.

The $43 million Mount Sinai Hospital will be four times the size of the present building, containing 830,000 square feet on 18 levels.

"Our construction program has progressed rapidly, and task forces of our board members, medical, nursing and hospital staff, are deeply involved in the necessary planning to effectively move into and commence operation of our new hospital," said Monty Simmonds, president of New Mount Sinai Hospital. "With the continued support and co-operation of all levels of government and all those associated with our hospital, we shall attempt to meet the challenge of providing our community with necessary and beneficial health care programs."

Rabbis evaluate life of Levin

Toronto rabbis have expressed diverse opinions in trying to evaluate the life of Moscow Chief Rabbi Yehuda Leib Levin who died recently.

Rabbi Jordan Pearlson of Temple Sinai said, "He was a man who had an almost impossible task to walk as a symbolic Jew on the precipice between the solid ground of Jewish loyalty and empty abyss of the constant threat of Russian pressures. He fulfilled this at enormous personal cost, bringing forth the admiration and pity of Jews everywhere."

Rabbi Emmanuel Forman of Shaarei Shomayim said: "This loss is both tragic and poignant. Tragic because this loss of spiritual leadership will, in all probability, not be replaced because of the years of religious supression in the Soviet Union. Poignant because his impossible position resulted in an inability to fulfil his own aspirations."

Rabbi Erwin Schild of Adath Israel said he never met Levin, but he got the impression Levin "certainly tried to do his best for the Jews of the Soviet Union, and he thought the best policy was to co-operate with the authorities. Whether he meant what he said, nobody knows. Under the circumstances, he was convinced what he was doing was best for Jews."

A new era

How to beat an Indian with one hand tied behind your back

Like most urban residents, Jews have little knowledge of the tragedy of Canada's Indians. As casual visitors some may have visited one of the reserves and noted the general poverty and in particular, the apathy which seems to afflict many of the Indian bands. It probably never occurred to such visitors that this quality is not "typically Indian" but the result of years of confusion and bureaucracy in the administration of Indian affairs by successive governments.

By now it has become easy to defeat the Indians. A good bureaucrat can do it any day of the week. For example, there are several hundred bands of Indians in Canada, each with its own problems of language, work and education. You can defeat them easily by insisting on policies and programs which apply to all, but which fit none. When such programs fail you can insist that the Indian bands form an association and decide amongst themselves what they want. Then when the association makes its recommendations you can insist that they fail to reflect the diversity of the bands.

Indians have historically been the wards of the Federal government. Every once in a while the Federal government attempts to give them away to the provinces. Then the provinces give the Indians back to the federal government.

When things get tough on the reserve and it becomes impossible to make a living, you can tell Indians to "go get lost" in the city. When they begin to present a distinct urban problem because they have not had the education and training to function adequately in an industrial setting you can "chase them back to the blanket." If you are an enlightened administrator, you will offer to help them reconstruct a tribal council and send them an anthropoligist to teach them how to do medicine dances.

Whatever you do, stop in mid-program and head in the other direction. Change the rules of the game as often as possible, especially if the Indians are catching on to the rules. By the time you have finished you will have persuaded a lot of them that they can't cope and convinced the rest that apathy is the best policy.

Then along came Harold Cardinal. The 26 year old president of the Alberta Indian Association, has a round baby face, and horn-rimmed glasses, but he refuses to get confused, climb down or back off. In spite of his youth, he has already written an excellent book, The Unjust Society, a militant plea to let the Indian face the future on his own terms. And he has had the fortitude and skill to challenge Indian Affairs Minister, Jean Chretien in two days of hearings of the Commons Indian Affairs Committee.

In a way, it does not matter whether Mr. Chretien or Mr. Cardinal were right in their arguments. After countless years, in which Indians sat silently and were too embarrassed and sick to express their shame at what was being done, Harold Cardinal, who has a degree in sociology, speaks quietly and forcefully. He is a long overdue and necessary phenomenon.

When Mr. Cardinal stalked out of the committee room quipping, "They can get rid of ministers too, you know, as well as Indians" a new era in Indian affairs began. For a 26 year old leader of a provincial Indian association to challenge the Federal minister and to give as good as he got on his opponent's home ground is a mark of both skill and courage. More importantly, it signals the growth of a new pride and self confidence that will defeat apathy.

Scramble for ex-generals

By MOSHE RON

TEL AVIV -

Political parties in Israel are scrambling to find famous ex-generals who would embellish Party lists.

The Herut Party did this two years ago by coopting General Ezer Weizman, who left the army and chose a political career. It is expected that before the next Knesset elections, some former generals will appear in safe places on the lists of several parties. Certainly, there will be Yigal Alon, Moshe Dayan, Chaim Barlev, Yitzhak Rabin, Ezer Weizman, Moshe Carmel, Chaim Hertzog and perhaps some other generals who are still serving in the army.

Chaim Barlev is the eighth chief of staff of Zahal. He is the third who served for over three years in this position. Only Moshe Dayan and Yitzhak Rabin have served over such a period of time owing to the Sinai Campaign in 1956 and the Six Day War in June 1967.

The first chief of staff was Jacob Dori, who took over this post on May 14, 1948. He was chief of staff for 18 months and in 1949 Yigal Yadin, who is a famous archaeologist today, succeeded him. He served until December, 1952, and left his post owing to differences with the former defence minister, David Ben-Gurion, who cut the defence budget.

Afterwards, came General Mordechai Makleff. A year later, General Moshe Dayan was appointed chief of staff and held the post for a period of five years. Then came General Chaim Laskow who served until January 1, 1961. His successor was General Zvi Zur, today chief military counsellor of the Defence ministry. He left his post in January 1964 when General Yitzhak Rabin became Chief of Staff for a period of four years.

In January, 1968, General Chaim Barlev took over.

According to a government decision, the chiefs of staff should be changed every three years, but the government has the right of prolonging this period of time. Yitzhak Barlev will leave his post at the beginning of 1972; he will be succeeded by General David Elazar. Barlev was very popular among the soldiers and also among mothers among the soldiers and also among mothers, fathers and wives whose children and husbands served in the army. The Israelis like his quiet and balanced speeches, which are clear and flawless and without rhetoric.

Chaim Barlev will have to wait, according to the law, for a period of 100 days before he can enter the government as minister of commerce and industry. The government has some obligations to the Ambassador in the U.S., Yitzhak Rabin. When this former chief of staff will terminate term of service in Washington (likely in February 1973), he will be appointed a member of the government.

Some functionaries in some parties are very much dissatisfied with the precedents that high officers of Zahal immediately enter the Knesset or the Government, after finishing their service.

Journalist Moshe Meisels of Maariv published an interview with one of the younger Mapai leaders, member of Knesset Abraham Ofer, who is the general manager of the "Shikyn Ovdim" Company. Ofer declared that it was not desirable from a political point of view that generals should enter political life and join the Knesset and government immediately after terminating their army service. This hinders younger party functionaries from reaching high political positions, he said.

From the social and democratic points of view, there should be no discrimination against ex-army generals from reaching the highest political positions in the country. Chaim Barlev and Yitzhak Rabin have distinguished themselves as efficient and able leaders and one cannot understand why they should be barred from becoming members of the government. They have enough experience in the field of economics. Why should managers of economic or governmental institutions be able to become ministers without a political and social stage, and ex-generals not?

Israeli Galili, minister without portfolio, declared that Chaim Barlev and Yitzhak Rabin are definitely capable from a personal, aesthetic and social point of view of becoming members of the government. A similar attitude was adopted by another leader of Mapai, Yehoshua Rabinovitz, the mayor of Tel Aviv. He said that the interview with Ofer was unnecessary and it was deplorable that such statements should be published.

The Israeli public values the Zahal generals as men who have contributed very much to the security of the State. They have grown up on kibbutzim, or in other places of the country and their mentality is quite different to that in other countries, where generals strive for power. Therefore, the public outcry against generals entering political careers immediately on terminating their military service, has caused strong opposition among the Israeli public.

Holy Blossom seminar

Sharp provides "fresh insights"

The Honorable Mitchell Sharp, secretary of state for external affairs, delivered what was essentially a lecture in political science last Friday night when he addressed the seminar at Holy Blossom Temple, sponsored by that congregation's social action committee.

The minister, poised, quiet spoken, urbane exemplifies a special Canadian tradition. He lacks the flamboyancy and fulsome rhetoric of his U.S. counterparts and is probably more at home with academicians than in the hurly-burly of politics. This quality was reflected in his speech which offered a number of fresh insights.

Sharp pointed out that there has always been a struggle for advantage between the provinces and the Federal government. In times of peace and prosperity he insisted, the provinces come to the fore, in times of war the provincial governments recede as the nation draws itself together to meet and overcome the crisis.

At another point Sharp pointed out that economically Canada comprises five regions, each with its own particular characteristics and interests. "This is one of the reasons why Canadian political parties with any pretentions to being national, seem to differ so little in their general programs. By the time the national parties have worked out compromises among their own representatives from British Columbia, the Prairies, Ontario, Quebec and the Atlantic Provinces, they look very much alike.

"The only political parties which appear to offer radically different programs are those with a narrow base that have little hope of attaining power in Ottawa . . ."

The calm displayed by Canadians in the face of the threat of the end of Confederation puzzles many foreign visitors. They fail to realize that Canadians have been living with the threat of dissolution for over 100 years. They have watched the pendulum swing back and forth, seen wacky politicians rise and disappear and been party to yet another miraculous survival.

Sharp sounded slightly wistful when, in complimenting his hosts, he said, "This Temple exemplifies the way in which one of our great communities maintains its particular faith, traditions and culture while at the same time making its distinctive contribution to the life of the nation as a whole." He might have wished to add, "Would that others would seek to do likewise."

Competition in militancy

Violence hurts protest movement

England with its lengthy history of Jewish residence publishes several excellent journals dealing with events of particular Jewish interest. Among these is the Jewish Observer and Middle East Review edited by Maurice Samuelson.

Recently the editor of that journal, reviewing the work of English organizations prominent in demonstrations on behalf of Soviet Jewry stated:

"As in so many fields of public activity, there is sometimes a tendency for passionate committment to give way to thoughtlessness and irresponsibility. There is also a more common tendency for cautiously responsible circles to shrink from militant action. But despite these two opposing tendencies, the majority of British people have managed to combine both energy and responsibility.

For this reason, the demonstrations in this country have not been marred by some of the ludicrous activities seen in other countries, especially the United States. Nor has there been any serious interest in the antics of the Jewish Defence League or the press conference teachings of Meir Kahane, its Rabbi.

It is not just that violence and fanaticism are foreign to the temperament of Britain and its Jewish community. But Jews in this country are sufficiently informed to have noticed that shock tactics used in a political vacuum not only do not succeed, but are usually counter-productive.

For a time, it is true, they might have dramatized the Soviet Jewish question, and so shaken public complacency. But when - as is today the case - the public is far from complacent, such acts are an irrelevant diversion. They draw attention away from the continuing wave of democratic, mass action, and blunt its cumulative impact on world opinion and on the Soviet Government. Outright violence actually discredits the protest movement, and threatens to weaken its public support.

As far as the Soviet Union is concerned, it is the opinion of a recent distinguished immigrant to Israel, Professor Michael Zand, that violence against Soviet property and personnel overseas does not ease the lot of Soviet Jews, but feeds the hatred to which they are already subjected."

The editor's statement is quiet but telling. Those who are engaged in a competition in militancy should heed them.

Dogs become Israelis' best friends

By NECHEMIA MEYERS

TEL AVIV -

Until very recently, Jews and dogs didn't hit it off very well together. Perhaps for Englishmen or for Canadians, the dog was really man's best friend, but without a doubt, in the ghettos of Eastern Europe, the dog was a Jew's worst enemy.

Yiddish literature is filled with horror stories about Jews cruelly set upon by hunting or watchdogs of Slavic noblemen and police; about the growing terror in the heart of Jewish children approaching a "goyish" neighborhood, the classic borderline defining the limits of safety being always the Israel's most famous storyteller, the late Nobel prize winner S.J. Agnon, used a dog, Balak, as the symbol of evil incarnate in his brilliant Jerusalem novel Tmol Shilshom.

It was this virtually inborn fear of canines plus the cost of keeping pets which, combined, kept Jewish Palestine all but dogless until 1933. Then Hitler came to power and thousands of German Jews, many of them dog lovers, fled to the Jewish National Home. In the early years of the Nazi regime, the emigres were allowed to bring some of their property, and some of their dogs, with them. Little by little German Shepherds and Dachshunds appeared on the streets of Tel Aviv, Haifa and Jerusalem, invariably at the end of a leash held by a Yecke, as the German Jews were called.

But during the last decade, dogs have come into their own in Israel. Now, we boast two monthly magazines and two organizations - the Israel Kennel Club and the Israel Dog Breeders Association - for dog lovers. Together, their membership is only 700, but both are growing quickly. Significantly, well over half the members are Sabras under 30.

Dogs are to be found in almost every home in our most blatantly upper middle-class neighborhoods (Savyon and Zahala are examples) and, though to a lesser extent, in the concrete jungles of Tel Aviv. An increasing number of kibbutzniks also raise dogs, for pleasure as much as for security.

It is an expensive hobby. A good stud-book listed pedigreed dog costs some $125 and another $7 to $14 per month to raise, which takes quite a bite out of the average Israeli salary. But more and more Israelis seem to be willing to make the investment.

The most popular breeds in Israel are the Poodle, the German Shepherd, the Collie, the Terrier, the Schnauzer and the Puli. The last two, originally imported from Germany and Hungary respectively, have been particularly well developed here and are now exported to Europe.

Israel is also the native heath of two original breeds: the Canaanite dog and the Saluki. Canaanite dogs originated in the center of the country while the Saluki has been brought here from the Sinai Desert, where it was used by the Beduin as a hunting dog until they ran out of game. The Saluki is, incidently, the very aristocratic dog usually shown in hunting scenes on ancient Egyptian reliefs.

Dogs also do their bit for defence, helping to guard Israel's borders, her settlements and her vital installations. Most of the four-legged sentries are big dogs, but in a pinch, any breed will do. One animal on guard at a Galilee army base, for example, is a Chihuahua; he doesn't have much brute strength, but he certainly can bark!

ask the rabbi

Coming of Messiah; recital of Kiddush; tennis on Sabbath

1. What are the conditions antecedent to the coming of the Messiah? The rabbinic sources seem to be contradictory on the point.

RESPONSE:

It is important to realize that on such matters as the coming of the Messiah there is, in addition to official doctrine, much speculation so that it is not at all surprising that there is a variety of opinions and a degree of contradiction. Does the Messiah have to perform miracles in order to substantiate his claim? Many Jewish teachers have answered in the affirmative. Maimonides answers in the negative, proving his case by the fact that Rabbi Akiba hailed Bar Kochba as the Messiah even though he did not perform any miracles.

Maimonides calls special attention to the element of speculation in rabbinic statements on the coming of the Messiah and declares in so many words, that we need not be bothered overmuch by these things. We can safely leave the future to God. When the Messiah will have come (or, as many would prefer to say, when the Messianic Age will dawn) we shall know. For the rest it is our present duty with which we should be concerned.

2. Why is the Kiddush recited standing?

RESPONSE:

Only the first part of the Kiddush (dealing with the creation of the world) has to be recited standing. The reason given is that when one recites this section one testifies to God as Creator and, in Jewish law, a witness is obliged to stand when giving his testimony.

3. May one play tennis on a private court on the Sabbath or Yomtov?

RESPONSE:

It appears from the sources that Jews in Europe in the Middle Ages used to play a ball game that resembled tennis. While some medieval authorities forbid this on Sabbath and festivals, others permit it. The famous French commentators, the Tosafists, permit it (Betza 12a). The Shulchan Aruch (Orach Chayim 308, 45) rules that it is forbidden to play ball games on Sabbath and festivals but R. Moses Isserles in his note (and see 518, 1) remarks: "But some authorities permit it and it is the custom to be lenient." I have been told by a member of his family that the first Lord Swaythling, who was a strictly observant Jew, used to allow his children to play tennis on the Sabbath on his private court.

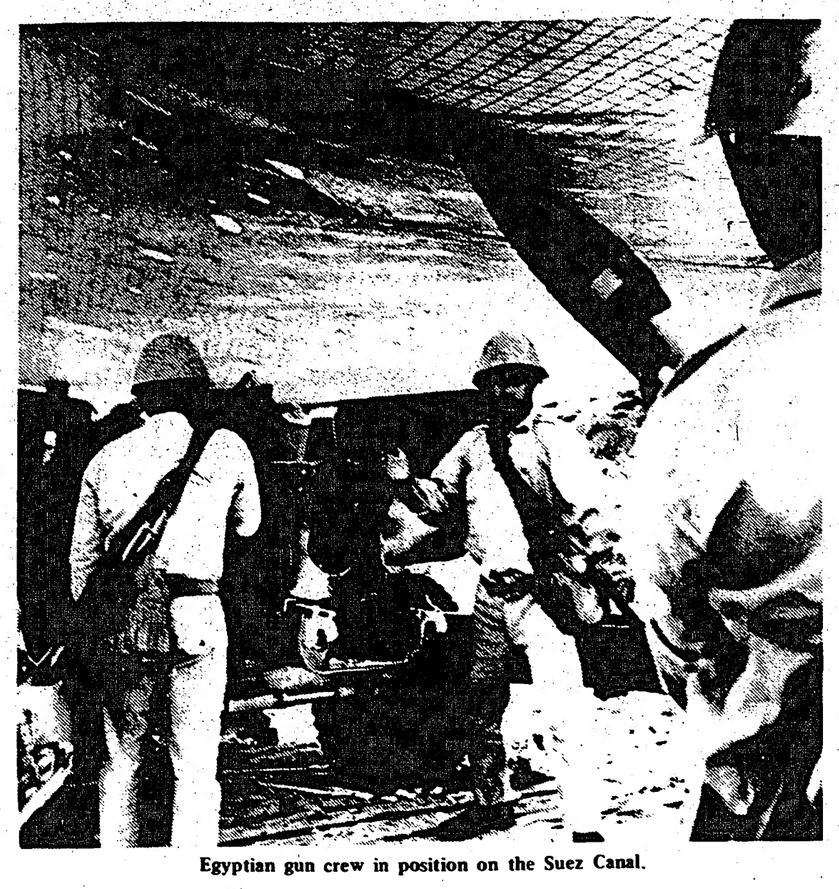
Opinion

Egypt is losing Russia as ally, but is war closer ?

By W. GUNTHER PLAUT

President Anwar Sadat of Egypt has said that the only way for Egypt now is to prepare for armed battle. The war council of 13 Arab nations has already met and in view of these developments one must ask whether the situation has seriously changed, and whether war is closer. The answer appears to be twofold: the situation has indeed changed, but war does not appear to be measurably closer.

As of this writing (Nov. 26), the major change consists not so much of what Sadat has said but of a noticeable diminution of Russian commitments to Egypt. In other words, the Soviet Union's support for Egypt has been weakening, despite the enormous military and financial investment it has made in that land. This change of Soviet policy has not as yet assumed drastic importance, but to any political observer who cares to look more closely it is in evidence. For some time now Russian leaders have been worried about the instability of Egyptian leadership (for Sadat is no Nasser, and some of his associates are already looking for the day when he will be ousted from power), and Egypt's union with Syria and Sudan did not leave the Russians exactly overjoyed. They therefore have looked for some political alternative along the Mediterranean and have apparently found it in Algiers, where President Boumedienne has for some time been making increasingly strong overtures to the Soviet Union.



Egyptian gun crew in position on the Suez Canal.

Recent events suggest that Russia is now sufficiently confident that Algiers represents a real alternative in North Africa and in consequence it has been treating Egypt with a new kind of schoolmasterly disdain not heretofore in evidence. This came out into the open when President Sadat visited Moscow in October and did so shortly after he had nominated his old friend Yahia Hassan Abdel Kader as Ambassador to Moscow, a man whose anti-Communist feelings were well known and whose nomination appeared to be a calculated show of independence to the Soviet authorities. When Sadat himself subatmosphere distinctly cool. The Soviets could now afford to let the Egyptians have the back of their hand and tell them to get in line, especially also since meanwhile the Soviet Union and the United States had moved closer together and had apparently agreed that a new outbreak of war in the Middle East had to be avoided under all circumstances.

There were little by-plays. Note, for instance, the way in which Sadat's speech at the Kremlin was reported in the press. In Cairo and elsewhere Sadat was quoted as having said that "force and only force" was the way to put pressure on Israel, while the Soviet version of this speech was that "strength and only strength" could accomplish this. This change was not accidental. Sadat is not unwilling to push the Soviet Union into a confrontation, but Moscow will have no part in this, certainly not at a time when it is not the United States which is yapping at its heels, but the People's Republic of China.

What does it all amount to? While no one can rule out some diplomatic or military folly similar to that committed by Nasser in 1967, the Soviets may be counted upon to put the leash on any major venture by Egypt. They will not however be unwilling to mount a major propaganda display in the United Nations. This does not cost anything, and the cards are stacked so that their side is bound to carry the day. However, the Soviet Union will have to vie with China for the honorable spot of being Big Brother to the Arabs.

Friends of Israel should therefore not get too nervous. Obviously the armed forces in Israel will be on the alert and some limited clashes along the Suez Canal will probably be initiated by Egypt. The battle of words in New York will be painful but not decisive. Old lies will be repeated and magnified and then put to a vote which is already now predetermined. Unfortunately the United Nations as it is organized at the present time is not a judicial but a purely political body. It makes no moral judgments even though it pretends to make them.

Not until the world organization undergoes a radical reorganization will it be able to do much more than talk. Meanwhile the search for peace will go on, and the longer the detente between Soviet Russia and the U.S. will last the better for all concerned.

"The poor among us have become our own 'Jews of silence' "

by J. B. Salsberg

Poverty, according to an old proverb, is no disgrace. Indeed there are those who maintain that poverty is the surest way to reach the heavenly kingdom. So let us deal with a much neglected subject: poverty in the Jewish community and the poor that dwell within it.

* * * * *

For some time now I have been disturbed by the effect that certain non-Jewish thinking about Jews seems to have on the thinking and behavior of some Jews.

What I mean is that some people in the upper spheres of our leadership seem to be "unawaredly" influenced by some of the falsehoods that our enemies spread about us. Take, for instance, the canard that "all Jews are rich" and that "the Jews have all the money." This calculated bit of anti-Semitic propaganda was used against us even at a time when the bulk of world Jewry, then living in Eastern Europe, was bogged down in a quagmire of insufferable poverty.

In all generations our enemies used such poison weapons against us for the most shoddy and selfish social and political reasons. But we must beware of assuming the posture in which our enemies like to depict us.

Jewry, as a national group, is not composed of a single social or economic class. We claim the right of all other peoples: to have our rich and our poor, our saints and our sinners. Indeed it has always been that way, even when the prophets walked this earth. If it had not been so we might not have had prophets like Amos . . .

Within the larger stream of Canadian life we constitute a scaled-down replica of the whole. But while Canada's wage and salary earners, the poorly housed, the unemployed and the rest of the poor are very articulate and very much involved in the social areas, the same cannot be said of our own poor and non-affluent Jews on the smaller stage of organized Jewish life. Why?

* * * * *

It is not long since the Jewish wage earners and the Jewish poor constituted the most articulate and effective social and political force in larger communities like Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg and even some of the smaller centres like Hamilton. At present that once volatile social segment of our community has become our own brand of "Jews of silence". What happened to them? It is an undemocratic, unhealthy and unreal state of affairs.

What is even more disturbing is the fact that, (to borrow a current expression) "our spiritual and lay leadership" reveals an unawareness of the missing voices of our own poor and of the alarming uninvolvement of our Jews without money in organized Jewish life. Have they swallowed the cynical propaganda of our detractors that "all Jews are rich" and have, therefore, begun to think and act accordingly? If that is so then it is high time that our "spiritual and lay leadership" take another look at the social picture of Canadian Jewry. They may be surprised at what they will see.

Of course there took place a far-reaching social transformation in the Canadian Jewish community. But that is also true of Canada as a whole. To be sure we are no longer concentrated in the "needle trades" as we once were but that doesn't mean that our people have all become middle class "executives." No, Messiah has not yet come; all people are not yet equal; the lion and the lamb do not rest together and there are many among us who, like Sholem Aleichem's melamed, are asking where they can get a few roubles to provide for the Shabes . . . (All of which will, I hope, be duly proven and further discussed next week.)

* * * * *

P.S. A reply to all Bathurst St. readers who complained to Uncle Eliezer about the word "Keinora" in last week's column. Some thought I shouldn't have used the word without an English translation. Others thought that the word is all right but I left out an "h" and it should be spelled "Keinhora" and not "Keinora" as I did. The truth is that there is no such word at all, with or without an "h". But, Bathurst St. and all the Bathurst Streets in North America think that there is and they use it, as they say, right and left. Actually it should read: Kein Eyin Hora, which means "no evil eye". Now you see what our Bathurst St. natives are capable of! First it was Kein Eyin Hora; then it became Kenayin Hora and finally it simmered down to "Keinora." OK, uncle?

If another Six Day War breaks out, Jews everywhere will be affected

"Do away with Diaspora parties and become workers for Israel," Arizona reader urges

Dear Editor:

While relaxing in Arizona, I still read The Canadian Jewish News from cover to cover. I note in the last issue something that troubles me.

The Revisionists are advertising to have their representatives elected to the Zionist Convention. The Labor Zionists want their representatives and the Mizrachi and the Hapoel Hamizrachi are advertising meetings of their own. The general Zionists are not advertising in that same issue at any rate, to have their representatives elected, but the issue contains a complaint from Daniel Monson, the president of the Zionist Organization of Canada, against the Canadian Zionist Federation.

I had hoped that when we formed the Federated Zionist Organization of Canada, we would gradually do away with parties in the Diaspora and that we would all become Zionists and workers for Israel. The people who live in Israel have the right to belong to parties and they have a right to try to elect the kind of Government they want. We who live outside of Israel, should support the entity Israel, regardless of how they vote or what party they put into power. We have a certain amount of co-operation in Canada in fund-raising but the Labor Zionists still have their own fund-raising campaign. Isn't it time, especially in the present stress, for the Zionists of Canada to forget their divisions and their parties and for all of them to join together, just to be Zionists and supporters of Israel.

Egyptian President Sadat has made a speech that it was impossible to make peace with Israel and he urged his people to go to war. If hostilities are renewed all Zionists in Israel and out of Israel, whatever party they belong to, are in the same boat. I hope at the next convention, somebody will have the wisdom to appoint a commission to try to work out a union between all the Zionist factions in Canada.

You have a fine newspaper with up-to-date information on the Jewish theme, in Israel and elsewhere. I know you can do a lot to help bring about this union.

Dear Editor:

I came back from Israel this summer with an attitude similar to many others about the arrogance and impoliteness of the Israeli Jews and also the surprising politeness of the Arabs. So when your article The cockiness of Israelis; the politeness of Arabs in the Nov. 12 issue was shown to me, I read it with interest. I was interested in how you might explain away this phenomenon and I might say now that you could have done better than this. But you tried.

The first statement I'd like to talk about is "what appears to be impoliteness is often an impatience to get on with a job that urgently needs doing." If you went to get help from a businessman and he snapped at you "get out of here! I have a lot of important work to do!" would you be satisfied at an explanation that he wasn't really being impolite, he was just impatient to get on with an urgent job? And how often are they really engaged in such important work? When old ladies jostled their way in front of me in bus queues, elbowing me, and once even knocking me to the ground, what urgent job was I keeping them from? Maybe supper wasn't ready.

The next statement refers to the Arabs. "In the Arab world conflict is so close to the surface in interpersonal relationships that formal politeness must be maintained to prevent the outbreak of violence. Differences of opinion between friends cannot be discussed without risking enmity."

I've often heard Jews use the argument that if such-and-such a statement had been made about the Blacks, everybody would be angry, but nobody recognizes it as racist when it's said of the Jews. Well, I suggest we use the same method of examination for this blatantly racist statement. Why don't you just lay it out in the open? Arabs are biologically a savage and uncivilized people. They can only deal with a personal conflict by resorting to physical violence. C'mon now. When an Arab invited my friends for coffee, or when another gave me a tour of his city, and then treated me to a drink, I considered it as politeness. If, as you say, they were hostile, and wanted to tell me to go to hell, why didn't they just leave me alone, or tell me to go to hell; the Israelis would have. Such acts of hospitality and politeness just can't be explained away.

Finally there is your statement, "What Westerners fail to realize is that Israeli informality and frankness is not arrogance but a refusal to engage in deceit and hypocrisy." Since when is the ability to use some tact equal to deceit and hypocrisy?

I understand your desire to defend your Israeli counterparts but I don't think they're really defendable. Rudeness is rudeness whether you can rationalize reasons for its existence or not. And those racist attacks on the Arabs, were certainly below a responsible paper, and especially a Jewish one. Finally, one of the sad things I learned this summer is that your desire to defend your Israeli counterparts, is a markedly one-sided desire. They wouldn't do the same for us.

Dear Editor:

Our way of life requires parents to celebrate a Bar Mitzvah with a somewhat lavish party, at which upwards of 300 couples are invited to share in the monotony of stereotype speeches, catering and an abundance of small talk with other couples at the same table. An average of one such Bar Mitzvah per month is commonplace.

Let us consider what takes place and the time, effort and money involved.

Months before, and until the happening, the parents are subjected to hundreds of man hours of preparation of guest lists, catering, musical and other arrangements. The costs can be anywhere from $5,000 and up. The invited guests, who for the most part have had no contact with the Bar Mitzvah boy, or remotely aware of who he is or what he is, are on the lists only because they may have had a passing acquaintance with his parents and it is the "in" thing to have a big affair. The invited guests boringly go through the evening and end up with the usual routine of handing in their presents - mainly cheques given to the boy who looks quite grotesque at the end of the evening with his jacket and pants stuffed with envelopes. What should normally be a private and intimate birthday party for the boy and his own personal friends is a meaningless get-together of his parents' friends - most of whom are strangers to him.

Consider therefore the financial statement of this celebration. The parents have spent say $5,000, the boy (his parents) get individual cheques from the guests - so the boy's family may, or may not, break even and the guests in turn have spent between $25.00 to $50.00 a piece for a few drinks, dinner and dance - not to mention the hundreds of dollars on dresses and hair-do's.

Now, let us digress a bit. These days with the absolutely vital drive for the State of Israel Bonds one is subjected to pressures to invest in these Bonds. We all realize the worthiness of the cause, but the pressures are being applied very insensitively to one's sensitive nerves. With the lack of new approaches to raising funds, people are invited to private homes and other meaningless gatherings where the professional fund-raisers use hard-headed commercial tactics to squeeze out the maximum from unsuspecting invitees. Those who know what to expect also know how to appear to be good givers, without giving anything. Here again, a considerable amount of time and effort is spent with results not exactly commensurate with the input.

Could we not make a plus out of two minus's? How much more meaningful would it be to all concerned if the following Bar Mitzvah invitation went out:

"My parents and I invite you to join us for Sabbath Services when I will be called to the Torah as a Bar Mitzvah.

"In lieu of the supper celebration, I invite you to invest at least $25 in a State of Israel Bond, which will be registered in your name. If you will complete the attached form and mail it to me together with your cheque in the envelope enclosed, I will, as my first step in attaining manhood, work together with the Bond office in processing your Bonds, which will be sent to you without delay. My parents, on their part, will invest in my name, bonds in an amount equal to what they would have spent on the supper celebration."

The beneficiaries are many - in pride, honor and fulfilment.

Dear Editor:

In the story of the Education Study Committee of the United Jewish Welfare Fund which appeared in The Canadian Jewish News of November 5, you mention that there are three high schools in the Toronto Jewish community.

There are in fact four high schools: the Community Hebrew Academy, the Ner Israel Yeshiva High School, the Beth Jacob High School for Girls and the newly established Independent Jewish Day High School. The latter institution now numbers 19 students in grades 10 and 11.

It is regrettable that in reporting the story, the fact that Toronto now boasts a fourth high school was omitted, particularly since the very same article refers to students of the high schools as "representing a vital reservoir of committed young Jews" to whom we can look for informed leadership in the Jewish community.

What price Jewish life?

By DR. STUART E. ROSENBERG

There was a time in the Twenties when virtually all of Palestine was for sale and could have been easily purchased from absentee Arab landlords by legal and appropriate means for something like $25 million. Dr. Chaim Weizmann, in his memoirs, describes how he came - hat in hand, to one American and Canadian Jewish community after the other - begging for money and how indifferently and coldly he was greeted by wealthy Jewish families. He returned from North America a crushed man.

Jews, however, Weizmann discovered, were just not ready to pay the price. They had to wait for Hitler; for three wars - 1948; 1956; and even until 1967 - before they awoke to their real Jewish condition. Think of the lives, the cultural treasures, the human and spiritual glories that could have been saved if Jews had been ready to pay the price for Jewish survival during the affluent years of the 1920's.

And don't think that history isn't repeating itself! Are we really ready to buy back Jewish life from the Russians - now? That question should top every Jewish agenda. And the pity is that everybody's talking about saving Russian Jewry, while most of us haven't a clue about how to start getting ready now.

The price on Jewish heads in Rumania in recent years was about $600. And in some cases, still, we can get Jews out of that land for a price within that range. What price Russian Jews? Silly question? Friends and neighbours: this happens to be the real, live question! Alas, we are no more ready today than Jews were in Weizmann's day, to get ready while the 'getting ready' is good.

Item: Kosygin tells an admiring, wide-eyed press and media conference that it is obvious that Russia cannot afford to allow Jews to leave Russia. The reason, he says, with a straight face, is simple: Russia has paid for their education and training as doctors, engineers, scientists, etc.

Of course, to my knowledge, none in the press corps had either the moral guts or the simple perspicacity to ask Kosygin the obvious question: wherefore is Russia different in this connection from any other supposedly free or allegedly enlightened country? Thousands of Canadians (doctors, engineers, scientists, et. al.) have left Canada freely and openly over many years. And who's to stop any free man from leaving any free country without raising the bandit's question: Who's going to pay the bill?

Bandit Kosygin was making it clear - for those who have ears to hear - that if we Jews want Russian Jews to leave, there is a price on their heads.

This language had never before been used by Russian leaders. Clearly this represents an opening wedge in a new Russian policy.

Russia wants to keep Egypt on edge, now that the local Communists have been ousted by Sadat, made to appear as traitors, and tried for their lives. And the political events in Sudan are even more ominously anti-Russian. China wants to buy her way into the Middle East at Russia's expense. The day is fast approaching when the Russians will seek to multiply their options, and not be tied only to Egypt as the lynch-pin of Soviet Mediterranean-politics.

What lessons for us Jews, caught again in the power-play of a grand weltpolitik? It is now time to start amassing 'Rescue Funds' in every Jewish community in the world, blood-money ear-marked for the Russian pirate-bandits. Recently, a little-noticed press item stated: "Soviet authorities in the Ovir (visa) department in the Ukraine asked Yaacov Gluzman, who has been separated from his wife Rita for two years, to pay 900 rubles (over $900) for an exit visa . . . Mrs. Gluzman was permitted to emigrate two years ago with assurances that her husband would be allowed to follow shortly. She has been in the United States for a month seeking help to induce Soviet officials to permit her husband to emigrate."

But now the secret's out. To this new recipe add a lot of 'dough'. In the hundreds of millions! Jews are for sale in the Soviet Union, and the time to buy them back to Jewish life is now.

Jerusalem and Moscow play a frustrating game of silence over the emigration of Soviet Jews to Israel

A strange game is being played out between Israel and the Soviet Union over the question of Jewish emigration. It is common knowledge that Soviet Jews are going in considerable numbers to Israel. Yet both countries involved seem anxious to play up the fact.

On the Israeli side, the outflow of Soviet Jews has led merely to an escalation of calls for more emigration, so that these calls are now more passionate than when no Soviet Jews were coming out at all. On the Soviet side, too, there is a reluctance to be frank about what is taking place. During his Canadian visit, Mr. Kosygin gave a conservative figure of the number of Jews leaving his country.

At the same time, both sides are frustrated by the restrictions of this unspoken agreement. The Soviets, for example, have occasionally encouraged reports from Moscow stressing how many Jews are on the move. Yet on the Israeli side, such reports are regarded as an attempt to conceal the immeasurably larger number who are struggling to get out.

On the Israeli side, however, there are also frustrations. More than a decade ago, immigration was also in progress from Rumania. Great was the rejoicing and publicity among world Jewry. But although this may have opened some Jewish purse strings to assist the Jewish Agency, it also coincided with the sudden closing of Rumania's gates. At the time, it was believed that the Jewish excitement had upset the Arabs who imposed pressure on the Rumanians to stop supplying human reinforcements to the Jewish State.

Deliberate burden: Today, too, it is possible to argue that too much fuss might cause a similar train of events. Nevertheless, there are today similar temptations to put the scale of Soviet aliyah frankly before the public in the free Diaspora, so that it might throw itself even more wholeheartedly into helping the Jewish Agency with its financial burden.

Israel's economy is under such terrific strain that it will probably cause a cut in defence spending. Not surprisingly, it has been suggested that this could be a deliberate Soviet motive for the current volume of Jews beings allowed to leave Russia. If so, this is something that should be understood by Israel's friends.

Are we, therefore, witnessing a relaxation in Israel's tight-lipped information policy? On Monday, the London Daily Telegraph carried a report from its Jerusalem correspondent, saying that ten thousand Soviet Jews are expected this year—three times more than last. It spoke of a sudden relaxation by the Soviet authorities. From previous figures, one can also calculate that the figure of ten thousand Soviet immigrants in 1971 will make the Soviet Union the largest single source of immigration into Israel this year, thus surpassing the influx from the United States, (which is also at a peak level). Moreover, it is the first time since the 1920's that the Soviet Union has provided the largest part of any year's Jewish immigration to the land of Israel.

In the air — on the last lap to Lydda.

Coming to Britain: One of the men most qualified to discuss the problem is Israel's Immigrant Absorption Minister, Natan Peled. Although the transportation and initial settlement of newcomers is in the hands of the Jewish Agency, it is Peled who is responsible for the more permanent absorption of newcomers into the fabric of Israeli society. It is he, too, who is responsible for the question to Israel's parliament as well as in the Cabinet.

He will shortly be talking about his work to Jewish audiences in Britain on behalf of the Joint Palestine Appeal, as well as in a number of European countries. He is one of the younger leaders of the Mapam party, which in the past stressed the need for good Israeli relations with the Soviet Union.

In Jerusalem, Peled gave an exclusive interview to "Jewish Observer" correspondent Ephraim Lahav, which covered the whole gamut of absorption problems. Asked about the Soviet immigration, Peled answered:

"Figures show that 1971 is the best year we have ever had, and I am optimistic about the future. The Soviet Government seems to have realised that no solution other than Jewish emigration is feasible."

Peled found it "interesting" that, in his Canada statements, Prime Minister Kosygin departed from the habit of presenting the problem of Jewish migration solely in terms of the reunion of families but specifically stated that the Soviet Government does not oppose Jewish emigration on principle.

But Peled qualified his optimism with three factors: a continuation of the struggle of Jews inside the USSR; international backing for this struggle—"but without violence which I reject"; and good absorption of the present newcomers in Israel.

No military angle: What (Lahav asked) did Peled think of Kosygin's argument that "the Soviet Union cannot supply Israel with soldiers to fight against Egypt"? Peled: "The numbers of Soviet immigrants are not significant enough to affect Israel's defensive manpower — even qualitatively. I think Kosygin raised this point more as a political than a military argument."

Referring to the campaign being waged for the release of Soviet Jews, Peled explained that the method and intensity of this campaign were "dictated to us by the Jews within the Soviet Union." Alluding to certain actions by Jewish militants, he warned that "we must not impose on Soviet Jewry a fight it cannot sustain.

"Indeed, when in 1968 the first letter by a group of Georgian Jews was published (seeking the right to go to Israel) I saw in it a sign that a new phase in the struggle had begun. But we must be considerate of the Soviet Jews because they have to bear the consequences. We have to play it by ear."

Unique religious heritage' makes Israel tourist favorite

Israel can fairly be regarded as one of the most appealing countries in the world for tourists. Its unique religious heritage has always made it a place of pilgrimage for Jews, Christians and Moslems. In the past two decades, it has drawn people who have special interests in the new State of Israel as well as those who are curious to see the developments and innovations in this ancient and historic country. But more recently it has also been "discovered" by a vast class of visitors whose main purpose is to enjoy a holiday pure and simple.

Developments in air travel and the introduction of low-cost fare systems have brought the world within the reach of the average man, woman and young person in any prosperous country. A few figures will demonstrate how this tourism explosion is affecting Israel.

In 1970, Israel was host to 437,000 foreign visitors, an increase of 7 percent over the previous year. Approximately 105,000 of them were students and other young people. The total for the entire year of 1971 is expected to exceed 550,000. During the first eight months of the year, 440,000 tourists entered the country, an increase of 36 percent over the same period of 1970. In July alone - the peak month of the tourist season - some 100,000 tourists arrived in the country, making this the most successful single month in the history of Israeli tourism.

In the first seven months of 1971, the number of tourists from the United States and Canada alone totalled 162,500. The next largest numbers came from France (38,500), the United Kingdom (27,500), and Scandinavia (18,500).

Israel's tourist income in 1971 is expected to reach about $140 million. This figure does not include the income of the national carriers, Zim and El Al. In 1970, earnings from tourism were $104 million. The average stay per tourist in the current year has been 15 days.

Today, Israel offers the tourist a choice of 300 hotels recommended by the Ministry of Tourism, comprising more than 16,500 rooms. By international standards, 17 percent of these hotels are in the 5-star, 20 percent in the 4-star, and 27 percent in the 3-star class.

The Jerusalem area has 57 recommended hotels, containing altogether 3,600 rooms. Twenty-two of these hotels are in West Jerusalem, 31 in East Jerusalem, and 4, a short distance outside the city. Among the 5-star hotels in the capital are the long-renowned King David, the Intercontinental on the Mount of Olives, and the Mount Scopus and the St. George in East Jerusalem.

The metropolitan area of Greater Tel Aviv, which includes Bat Yam and Herzliyya, contains 60 recommended hotels, with a total of 4,000 rooms. The leading ones are the Dan, the Hilton, the Sheraton, the Sharon and the Accadia, all located on the seashore but close to the commercial and cultural centers of the area. In addition, there are eight 4-star hotels on the seashore or in the center of Tel Aviv.

"Suprising variety and richness" found in community theaters

theater review

By JENIVA BERGER

Although little theater doesn't command the attention that our larger professional houses do, there's a surprising variety and richness to be found within the small ambitious groups that call themselves Community or Semi-professional.

This is the time of the year for hearty samplings; most little theaters are well into their second productions, so if you're having trouble adjusting your taste to the $15 top price at the Royal Alex, relax, Lauren Bacall may not be with the Yorkminstrels this season, but you'd be surprised at the talent lurking just around the corner.

Here is a capsule view of the recent and appealing little theater openings.

The Importance of Being Earnest at the Colonnade Theatre (until Dec. 11th) is a perennial favorite for Oscar Wilde lovers, and also for those who like an evening crammed with delicious wit. Wilde was the darling of London Cafe society in the 1890's, and he knew his crusty upper class. How well he caught all their foibles is more than evident in his play about a zealous society matron looking for the right match for her snobbish daughter.

If you happened to catch the more serious, biographical Masque of Wilde which appeared just before this production at the same theater. Earnest is an invaluable follow-up. It's done by the New Theater who bill themselves as Toronto's newest professional theater. You won't find quite the necessary crispness in all the performances, but there are some gems afloat. Liza Creighton is very good as the vitriolic Lady Bracknell, Lynn Griffin is a delectable Cecily Cardew, and John Bayliss holds his own at the stuffy but likeable young man who pretends to be the Earnest of the title in order to catch his fiancee.

Hidden away on Maplewood Avenue is the temporary home for the capable, established University Alumni Dramatic Club, the Coach House Theatre, tiny but comfortably refurbished. Their second show this season is a tribute to the fine German playwright, Bertolt Brecht, who seems to be the man of the hour lately. Tonight: Bert Brecht is a compilation by the talented Anne Tait, of the songs, poems, and plays of the great man, and although it does not have the vitality it might during the first half of the evening - clinging to his more politically persuasive works - the second half, which introduces us a little more to the human being behind the ideas, is a rewarding experience. Rod Beattie, who speaks for Brecht during the evening, is often quite captivating, Michael Polley, sporting a resonant singing voice for his rendition of Mack the Knife is especially effective in his portrayal of the Judge Adzak from The Caucasian Chalk Circle, and Patricia Carrol Brown brings a nice warmth to the monologue The Jewish Wife in the second act.

Back again to the 19th century, the Scarborough Theatre Guild is offering Georges Feydeau's famous bedroom farce, A Flea In Her Ear Operating out of their permanent home, a reconverted church which has been most attractively designed to house a thrust stage, it's well worth a trip to 66 Denton Ave. to see this handsome and vivacious production. Most of the Guild's members have had wide experience in both community and professional theater, have won many awards through the years at the C.O.D.L. Festivals, and several in this recent cast have had training in England, Scotland, and Australia.

Feydeau's farces almost defy description with their racing plotlines filled with mistaken identities, amorous misadventures, and rampant infidelity which always seems to have an air of childlike innocence that only the French can perpetrate.

The pacing, timing, and proficiency director Anthony E. Jones and his generously talented cast exhibit is nothing short of exhilerating. Donna Yassolino, who has also designed the colorful sets and costumes, is bewitching as the French matron, Raymonde, and Terance Belleville as her sexually frustrated husband is marvellously adept in his duo roles.

It is altogether a vastly entertaining evening and a tribute to the caliber of Toronto's Community Theatre. It runs again from Dec. 3-5.

Canada Works

You can be a moving force in creating jobs for Canadians.

Canada works when Canadians get involved together. So the Federal Government is putting 498 million dollars to work, through a series of specific programs, to help create jobs for Canadians.

CANADA WORKS WITH YOU

You're a major force in making the program work. We're counting on you, either on your own initiative or through your community groups; to come up with ideas for the Local Initiatives Program. For example, you may have a social service project or an idea such as a cultural program, improvements to substandard housing, assistance to the handicapped, or others that create employment and make your community a better place.

The Training-on-the-Job Program will expand opportunities for training for those who are unemployed or have little work experience, and will work through business and industry.

For those with some basic work experience, the Canada Manpower Training Program has been extended to help provide additional learning.

CANADA WORKS WITH BUSINESS AND INDUSTRY

A program of tax credits or direct payments to employers encourages them to add trainees to their staffs through the Training-on-the-Job Program.

CANADA WORKS WITH MUNICIPALITIES

The Local Initiatives Program will help municipalities create additional jobs through worthwhile community projects. Provincial governments will work with municipalities to use this program to support and spur community projects.

CANADA WORKS WITH THE PROVINCES

There's a Federal-Provincial Employment Loans Program designed to create jobs by financing additional capital works projects throughout Canada. We'll be speeding up the program of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to get more homes, student housing, and sewage treatment projects under way.

Loans will also be made to exhibition commissions, boards and associations to get people working on multi-purpose fair and trade buildings.

CANADA WORKS WITH FEDERAL PROJECTS

There will be more job opportunities in expanded maintenance and improvement activities on Federal buildings; transportation facilities; forest and park projects; and many others.

WHERE IT ALL WORKS TOGETHER

It starts at your Canada Manpower Centre. For advice and assistance on any of the programs you feel apply to you or your community, contact your local Canada Manpower Centre. They'll be happy to help you.

When Canadians get involved together, CANADA WORKS.

Announce New Healing Substance: Shrinks Piles

Exclusive healing substance proven to shrink hemorrhoids and repair damaged tissue.

A renowned research institute has found a unique healing substance with the ability to shrink hemorrhoids painlessly. It relieves itching and speeds up healing of the injured, inflamed tissue.

In case after case, while gently relieving pain, actual reduction (shrinkage) took place.

Most important of all—results were so thorough that this improvement was maintained over a period of many months.

This was accomplished with a new healing substance (Bio-Dyne) which quickly helps heal injured cells and stimulates growth of new tissue.

Now Bio-Dyne is offered in ointment and suppository form called Preparation H. Ask for it at all drug stores. Satisfaction or your money refunded.

Levesque

They call themselves a nation. Especially the hundreds and thousands that might have been displaced persons, maybe through their own leaders' fault, but also through a certain - and you have to admit it (if you don't admit it, you're not facing facts) - through a fact that Israel wanted to be predominantly the Jewish homeland and did not want to be overloaded with an Arab population. I think that was a normal thing, but it had this effect and it's a very bloody one, of creating what was not a nation, maybe, but now has a national attitude among hundreds and thousands of people, especially younger ones growing up. The conclusion I came to but very carefully because it's not at all the way you said, I'm sorry to say, was that the only possible way out was that the major powers probably all agree on imposing, and if it's at all possible, an equitable solution. In other words, that there be a sharing of this near East area and especially that Israel makes it very clear that it's not looking for aggrandizement because it hasn't been as clear as it should be since the Six Day War. Does that answer your question?

CJN: Mr. Levesque, if I can go back to your speech, which I, fortunately, have been able to examine more recently than you have, the most positive suggestion you made was that there be a bi-national state.

LEVESQUE: No! Well, it could be, but that's one of the possibilities. In fact, it was evoked and some people in Israel, I've met some who are in the opposition have been evoking it ever since 1948. Yet, it doesn't seem to be possible because, and on the other hand, how do you split up again? If you remember the crazy, quilt "idea" the United Nations tried to bring forth in 1948. It's had its day. Is there a new way of doing things? I'm no international expert. It could be, it has to be some form of coexistence, otherwise, there's no future.

CJN: I find it interesting that you recommend a bi-national state for diverse groups in the Middle East, but can't find room for one here in Canada.

LEVESQUE: There might be one among others, and I won't go into that very long, because if you try and build analogies and make them stick as a sort of rule, you know, you say one thing in one context, you have to say the same thing in every context, you'll end up in a madhouse! And then also, just one point - just look at physical realities, if you look at this cooped up little place in the Middle East, or near East, and see two indentifiable groups with many things in common potentially and yet, tearing each other apart, and potentially being a sort of stick of dynamite for that whole part of the world, this very cooped up place and we compare them with, you know, for the foreseeable future the expanse we can use, well, even just on that, you know, physical basis, it's kind of silly to make equivalent.

The formal presentation completed, Levesque joined members of the seminar planning committee for lunch. He engaged in formal dialogue with members of the committee.

W. Gunther Plaut, Holy Blossom Temple rabbi, opened the conversation by stating that there were deep anxieties amongst the Jews of Quebec who feared that there might be a heightening of anti-Semitism in that province. History, he said, showed that when nationalism grows rampant in any country, anti-Semitism almost inevitably increases.

Levesque stated that he was aware of this feeling and sympathized with the reason for it. He said that he had spoken at many synagogues during the provincial election, not that he anticipated much Jewish support, but simply to keep an open line to the Jewish community. He sensed that the adults were fearful of change but that there was growing support from young Jews, particularly college students.

He stated that 80 to 90% of Jews in Quebec are nervous about the effects of separatism. "I know," he said, "that history shows that a rise in nationalism means Jews get it in the neck. But what can I do about it? I can't change your history. I can't foresee the future. However, anti-Semitism is not a significant French-Canadian characteristic and no special importance should be given to the occasional anti-Semitic statement from some political nut from one of the minor parties."

Levesque said there was a more serious problem in the fact that Jews in Quebec are closely related to the English community. "If they choose to put in with them," he stated, "what can I do?"

Professor Jacob Zeigel, a former faculty member at McGill, talked of the growing xenophobia that surging nationalism had imposed on Quebec. He stated that Jews feel most comfortable in a pluralistic setting, with open access to all parts of the country and all countries in the world.

Levesque responded that "If you tie in with that, you will have a real period of sensitivity. McGill University feels 'closed in' because for a long time it has served a part of the Quebec population, and not the whole of it."

Anti-Semitism

and cater to alienated middle-class young people.

Through the underground papers, Judge Rose continued, many thousands of young Americans have "in recent years been exposed to substantial doses of anti-Israel propaganda and a one-sided barrage of articles extolling the Arab cause in general and glorifying Palestinian revolutionary guerrilla terrorists in particular."

Judge Rose said that Liberty Lobby, headed by Willis Carto, a known anti-Semite, is the most vehement of the far rightist groups opposing Israel.

The ADL official charged Carto with using the "million dollar a year, Washington based Lobby" as "the pivot and showcase for a complex of other organizations, publications and enterprises whose extremism and anti-Semitism are often far from subtle."

Judge Rose said it was ironic that far-left and far-right groups are aiming a propaganda campaign against the same targets - Israel and "Zionism," and that both make comparisons between U.S. involvement in Southeast Asia and potential involvement in the Middle East. He said the extremists neglect to recognize that Israel has explicitely stated that it will accept no military support other than material and certainly does not want manpower.

He said that the far leftists falsely charge that Zionism is "a racist creation of Western imperialism" and brand Israel as "facist" and "Nazi-like," and a puppet of American imperialism. He said these groups have supported Palestinians and guerrilla terrorist movements as the vanguard elements of allegedly oppressed Arab peoples fighting a revolutionary and anti-imperialist war of national liberation.

Judge Rose contended that the far leftists "ignore the fact that Israel itself was born in a war of national liberation against an occupying foreign power, that its government is and has been socialist, and that its kibbutzes are models of participatory democracy."

Describing the ideological roots of the far right's anti-Israel views as varied, Judge Rose included the following as examples:

- The traditional isolationism of some on the far right;
- Equating Zionism with Communism;
- The tendency of certain extremists to view Israel and Zionism as pawns of the so-called "international bankers" - a term used by some extremists when speaking of Jews.

"These 'bankers,'" Judge Rose said, "are now charged with trying to drag the U.S. into a Middle Eastern war to further their allegedly nefarious pro-Israel schemes."

Judge Rose said that the Soviet Union's massive support to Egypt "apparently makes no difference to far rightists in their opposition to U.S. aid to Israel despite their claims to be militantly anti-Communist."

Judge Rose said that there are two evident dangers in the anti-Israel hate campaign of the extremists: "feeding neo-isolationism poses a dangerous threat to Israel's survival; the destruction of the State of Israel - the ultimate in anti-Semitism."

changes in the school curriculum, "given the people on this committee."

He says, "It will take a long time to get at the prejudice which exists in the attitudes of the general population." He feels this can be effective firstly, by removal of stereotypes from textbooks, and then by a program of deliberate discussion of prejudice in the province's classrooms.

The stereotype of "the wily Jew," or the "wild Indian savage," according to Dr. McDiarmid, are unconscious expressions. "If children are reared in an atmosphere of security, they have no need for scapegoats."

Mr. McDiarmid concluded that "an authoritarian society or an authoritarian family . . . can produce anxieties that cause individuals to look for scapegoats."

Vocational

physical deterioration. Perhaps we need government intervention to provide opportunities for the aged, as well as for youth.

Nor does JVS neglect the youthful population. Vocational counseling is beginning to become something of a "rite de passage" in some circles, and particularly with the tight labor market and rapid technological change, young people are concerned about their future. JVS also goes out where the action is. The Jewish day schools, YM-YWHA, and BBYO are beneficiaries of its psychological services for testing, guidance, and remedial work.

The highest degree of "tzedakah" in Judaism - helping a man obtain work - still remains valid. But the meaning of work is changing. Mr. Friedman emphasizes the word "productivity". "In this agency we're devoted to helping people make productive use of their time, interests, and abilities. We want to relate them realistically to the traditional world of work, and also to the fringes growing up around work.

ZOC receives most votes, but will protest election to the world Zionist tribunal

By LEWIS LEVENDEL

The Zionist Organization of Canada, which received the most votes in the election of delegates to the World Zionist Congress, has decided to launch a protest against "the unfairness and the conduct and decisions made by the national elections committee of the Canadian Zionist Federation."

The ZOC plans to take its protest to the WZC tribunal.

In a news release, the ZOC noted one of the major decisions made by the elections committee of the federation was the disqualification of about 200 postal ballots - the majority of which evidently were in favor of their group. Out of a total of 382 recognized ballots, the ZOC received 224.

The disqualified ballots were neither opened nor counted on the grounds that they were postmarked Nov. 22 or later, the ZOC said. The instruction sheet forwarded by the CZF to postal voters stated clearly "mail not later than Sunday, Nov. 21, 1971."

Many medium and small communities have no services on Sunday and envelopes were therefore processed and postmarked early on Monday, Nov. 22, the ZOC added. Moreover, some postal voters did not receive their ballots in the mail until Nov. 22 or 23 and could therefore not exercise their voting privileges before receiving their ballots.

The ZOC said it would have received at least five seats if the election committee would have been fair and correct in all its decisions.

The official results had the Mizrachi, Labour Zionists and ZOC gaining four seats each, and the Canadian Zionists for the Seventies and Revisionists two each.

Nathan Levitsky of Montreal, chairman of the national elections committee, said there was a "good possibility" the WZC would allot an additional seat to Canada. This would go to the Mapam party.

The final total vote was: ZOC 1,746; Labour Zionists 1,704; Mizrachi 1,701; Zionists for the Seventies 935; Revisionists 623 and Mapam 187.

The ZOC, in its news release, said its decision expressed in a resolution of Nov. 7 not to hold an election was "more than vindicated by the fact that the election results were almost identical with the distribution of seats as suggested by the ZOC and confirmed at a meeting of representatives of all organizations called expressly for this purpose in Montreal three weeks prior to the election date."

The CJN contacted a number of leading Zionist leaders for their reactions after the final results of the election became available.

Leon Kronitz, the veteran Labour Zionist leader from Montreal, said the elections were "a good idea. It stimulated interest in Zionist ideology and problems."

Regarding his own group's showing, he said probably less than one third of all Labour Zionists were registered for the vote "because the time for a membership drive was not sufficient. However, now that the election is over, it is time to unite again."

Sol Urman of Montreal, a leading figure in the Mizrachi movement, said he was disappointed "at the relatively light turnout for the election. Less than one in four persons eligible to vote cast ballots. He thought that about 50 to 60% of those eligible would vote.

Although satisfied with the Mizrachi showing, he said the group would have been happy to get three seats if "all that money would not have been spent on the election."

Israel Nachshen, a Mapam leader, charged that polling "was accompanied by irregularities.

"The physical arrangements for pollings were not adequate . . . The figures don't reflect the true Zionist picture in Canada.

"Our own showing is much less than we had expected but we had little money to spend in comparison to other groups."

Henry Steinberg, also of Montreal and a leader of the Canadian Zionists for the Seventies, a breakaway group from the ZOC, said he was pleased his organization did as well as it did. "We spent less than $1,000 and attracted about one-eighth of the vote. The concept of the election was a good thing, but it was regrettable that the cost factor escalated."

Revisionist leader Ben Milner of Montreal said, "The results proved that the majority of Canadian Zionists are still uncommitted politically. That's why the majority of Zionists did not take part in the election."

Although satisfied with his group's results, he considered as "nonsense" the spending of funds on the election. He said the Revionists would have done as well as other groups if it had started campaigning earlier.

Myer Bick of the Canadian Zionist Federation, when asked about the various claims of irregularities, noted that it was the first election in more than 30 years and admitted "there were some complications on the voting rolls and regarding identification cards."

The complications were "due to inexperience," he said.

Growly Bacall shines in APPLAUSE

By SZMUEL POLANDER

Lauren Bacall in Applause.

APPLAUSE, starring Lauren Bacall, a musical version of the film All About Eve has come to the Alexandra Theatre this week, and much to my surprise, it is a beautiful show.

What is really good and exciting about American musicals is ever present in Applause. What is excellent is the staging of dance numbers, spirited, building from solo bits to surging climaxes. You will recall some of the best of these in West Side Story, Fiddler, Cabaret, O Calcutta! and Hair. Applause has a couple of numbers that are at least their equal.

These dance numbers, richly costumed, featuring remarkably pliable, talented young people, charged with energy, and charging at each other, never fails to sweep the audience into a frenzy of applause.

Primitive rites should be so good!

Bacall is a remarkable personality. This vehicle really gives her an opportunity to use everything you ever liked about Bacall. She has a very fine comic sense. She is a growly actress, whose lack of the singing voice is more than compensated by her ability to come on strong as ever. She's the essence of the bitchy, selfish, clever but interesting as hell and permanently beautiful woman.

She moves wonderfully on stage and never lets down the charging tempos established in the dance numbers.

Greatly appealing is young female dancer, Leland Palmer, who is whimsically attractive and full of humor.

Eve, played by Virginia Sandifur, has a hard time. In musicals, there is little room for characterization in depth. All characters tend to be somewhat one dimensional. Since Eve never fools the audience, even though she may fool the characters in the play, she is disliked from the beginning. This may indicate how well Miss Sandifur is doing rather than suggesting that she is doing badly.
